Pāṇḍura, a warrior of Skanda. § 615u (Skanda) : IX, 457, 2575.

[Pāṇḍurājyābhisheka] (‘‘anointing of Pāṇḍu as a king’’). § 173 (Sambhavap.) : Upon the birth of those three children (§ 171), Kurujāngala, Kurukshetra, and the Kurus grew in prosperity, etc. The southern Kurus, in virtuous rivalry with the northern Kurus, walked about in the company of gods, ṛshis, and Cāraṇas. Virtuously ruled by Bhīshma, the kingdom was adorned with hundreds of cātyas and yūpas. Dhrtarāshtra, Pāṇḍu, and Vidura were brought up by Bhīshma as if they were his own children, and became well exercised in archery, etc., and well read in the Itihāsas and Purānas and various sciences, and the Vedas and Vedāngas. Pāṇḍu excelled all men in archery, Dhrtarāshtra in personal strength, Vidura in devotion to virtue. Hāstinapura was the foremost among cities. Because of Dhrtarāshtra’s blindness and Vidura’s being a pārasava (son of a brahman with a śūdra woman), Pāṇḍu became king. One day Bhīshma addressed Vidura [about the marriage of the two princes] (I, 109).
